

Employability Assessment

An independent telephone-based evaluation and guidance service designed to support HR advisors in cases where an individual who, due to their reported health condition, are absent from work or not in employment. This includes individuals who are in receipt of income protection, life insurance or sickness related benefits.

The following information will be collected where appropriate:

- Employment history details including job role and salary
- Review of training, education and core employment skills
- Current and or outstanding health issues, including treatment and symptoms
- Resulting limitations and how these affect an individual's access to work and day-to-day activities
- Identification of an individual's future goals

Service summary and outcomes

- An assessment of an individual's capacity for work, based on their function, core employment skills and local employment details
- The service is delivered by a Remploy employment, health and disability expert
- A detailed report is provided with return to work recommendations, focusing on capacity and core employment skills, together with an action plan that can be implemented by the individual
- Recommendations for further clinical or vocational rehabilitation services can be provided, including re-training or up-skilling, medical treatment, and further specialist assessments with the individual either at their workplace or elsewhere
