Training in Systematic Instruction

Are your employees equipped with the right skills and confidence to support and train a diverse workforce?

Do you work directly with (or for) those who may experience barriers to learning new tasks and skills due to their health condition or disability? For example, those with:

- Learning disabilities/differences
- Autism
- Mental health conditions
- Low self-esteem or confidence.

What is Training in Systematic Instruction (TSI)?

TSI is a training approach developed for those who support or train individuals to learn new tasks/skills, providing a framework to organise and apply tailored and effective training strategies to meet your learner(s) needs.
Two day course

Suitable for: Organisations, trainers and job coaches who support individuals to acquire practical skills needed in employment and independent living

Employers and organisations committed to demonstrating equality in the workplace by providing employees with the tools they need to adapt to the training needs of a diverse workforce.

Group size: 8–12 participants per workshop
Length: Two full days

Course content overview

This workshop introduces delegates how to effectively prepare, organise and apply task-based training. It is delivered over two days through a series of presentations, group discussions and practical exercises in a safe and open environment and provides an in-depth and understanding of:

- Preparation for training (job and task analysis)
- Identifying and applying appropriate training strategies
- Monitoring and recording progress and achievements.

Aims of the course

- Introducing trainers to the principles of TSI
- Applying TSI in employment, independent living and community-based activities
- Providing the opportunity to practice systematic instruction in a safe teaching environment
- Identifying and discussing different approaches to task-based training, learning and their role as a trainer
- Presenting an open forum for discussion.
